NUMBER 46.

TRUSTED AND TRUSTY.

No Sect in Heaven.

Talking of nests till late one eve,
Of the various doctrines the saints believe,
That night I staid in troubled dream,
By the side of a darkly flowing stream.
And a "churchman" down to the river came;
When I heard a strange voice call him name,
"Jesus" I said, "I am not of the fold!"
But the aged father did not mind.
And his long gown floated behind him,
As down to the stream his way he took,
His pale hands clasping a gilt-edged book.
"I'm bound for Heaven and when I'm there, I'll have no time for foolish prayer."
A single step in the flood to gain,
And the water reached me to the chin.
But his steps were floated on the tide,
Whether he belonged to "the Church" or not,
Then down to the river a Quaker strayed,
His dress of a sober man was made;
"My coat and hat must be all of gray, and I Cannot go any other way."

Then he buttoned his coat tight up to his chin,
And steadily, solemnly waded in,
And his steps were floated on the tide,
Whether he belonged to "the Church" or not,
Then down to the river a Quaker strayed,
His dress of a sober man was made;

"My coat and hat must be all of gray, and I Cannot go any other way."

Sailors and passengers with eager haste lowered themselves into the boats and steered them to shore under the direction of the captain, whose brave spirit only rose with the danger, hastily dashed spars together to form a rude raft for the rest. Mr.

Grey labored among these, gasping and almost fainting from the heat which had become well nigh intolerable. Often he glanced anxiously toward the hatchway, with the faint hope of seeing Reginald emerge from the burning cabin into which he had so desirably ventured.

The rat, the last hope of the crew, is floating on the crimson waves; the crowded boats have shored off. Mr. Grey, half blinded and soothed by the heat and smoke, springs down on the raft; he is followed by the captain, and all who remain of the passengers and crew; except the poor orphan boy. Just then exerted his utmost strength in trying to drag him across the burning deck. This is more dignified, certainly; but it reminds Carroll of Columbus's words: "We are about to meet all they feel, and more."

Let well fated bachelors have their share:

The Boston Evening Transcript has the right:

Pope himself an old bachelor, and character speaking from experience—affords but little comfort to the brotherhood. He says:

Let well fated bachelors have their share:

The New York Tribune has the right:

The "etymology of this word is anything but complimentary."—Junks derived from bakelos, foolish; and meane, from meane, after a knight of the lowest order. It is by some supposed to be derived from bacelotes, crowded, crowded with bachelors. This is more dignified, certainly; but it reminds John Quincy Adams left some 140,000
the right of industry, prudence and inheritance.
He was an upright man, and that man is the most rich in himself. No man can make you necks you out of him. And if I were to pick out infinitesimal men, I would pick out the man that in himself, rather than in his wealth, is the true man. It is the reality of manhood, the quantity of it, the richness of it, that makes a man rich.—Becker.

Carroll, we are informed, has been a resident of Columbus for four months, and has been engaged, in company with a man named Boynton, in keeping a saloon on North High street, near the High Street House.—Ohio

Loss of the Steamer Atlanta.— about FIFTY Persons Drowned.

The steamer Atlanta was lost on the 15th inst., about two hundred miles south of Sandy Hook. She ran on her way from New Orleans to New York, upon the return of the Governor, the case was so plain, there was no need of the formality of granting a requisition, and the Governor, upon leaving the facts, said to the Captain, "You have carried nothing away from doing your duty."—The steamer Atlanta was a small vessel, 100 tons burthen, and was bound for New York, having on board a crew of twenty-four, and a passenger list of twenty-eight, including the Governor, his wife, and a party of ladies and gentlemen.
The Ark W. E. Anderson, which picked up five of the survivors, said, "The Atlanta
